Design

The Hexagon 10's bold and geometric shape is a real conversation starter. Designed to break free from the ordinary, this speaker adds a touch of personality to your space while delivering high performance.

to surprise – rather like when you add spices to food. Suddenly you have friendliness, warmth and this creates a link with the user.

You're incredibly prolific and fast. Are you involved with every design from conception to completion? How can you undertake so much work?
OS Well, I have a team of 25 designers and five other staff in Tokyo and a designer in Milan. And I'm a workaholic. I believe the more you design, the more you want to. I do all the presentations of new products to my clients. I check all prototypes and design's construction. The Japanese are totally addicted to meaning and to making sushi or sashimi – if you hold a piece of rice gets warm and that destroys the taste. I like to come up with an idea, then serve it fast. The fresher it is the better. Of course, it means we make mistakes, but we can quickly rectify them because we're fast.

You've won lots of awards and been feted by the media – for example Newsweek included you in its article, 'The 100 Most Respected Japanese' back in 2006. How do you feel about this success?
OS For me, winning an award feels like winning a lottery ticket. It makes me happy but having dozens of awards doesn't change anything for me. Awards aren't just down to me. I can't do anything by myself. I owe my success to my team, who work hard, and my clients. ♦ to your mother over the phone. I want to create pieces that feel familiar to people. Because I think people are afraid of things they've never experienced before. I want to tap into feelings and experiences they had before, then give them a slight twist.

The warm, human element to work suggests it's rather romantic to you agree?
OS No. Unfortunately, I'm not a person. My own house is very much a gallery or a prison. It's got books, my dog. That's all I have. I'm not working. I don't make decisions. I always wear black trousers and and underwear. R. walk, go to the
